

Replying to: Lyric Kent: Everyone thinks differently. Would you hold these same standards to someone with a learning disability or someone that was caring for themselves because they had no family or went home and were beaten everyday? Would you just tell them to toughen up and do your homework?

so we need a generation to step up and teach there kids to be better parents so that there arent any bad home enviornments

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

Replying to: Chase Robertson: So this should push them to do even better if they get that sad by not getting something, competition will push them, if they want to stop getting laughed at for lets say getting a D in a class that should push them to do better not just lay down and let all the people that are hating them keep doing it. They need to learn to stand up for themselves

Everyone thinks differently. Would you hold these same standards to someone with a learning disability or someone that was caring for themselves because they had no family or went home and were beaten everyday? Would you just tell them to toughen up and do your homework?

Lyric Kent - an hour ago

So Just to sum it up we need to make the world a kinder place

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

Replying to: Lyric Kent: You can't expect parents to teach kids to be kind because not all parents are teachers have to be some of the kindest most caring people and I feel that at least a small part of their job should be to teach kids to care about what happens to other people otherwise theirs just going to be more hate in this world and we definitely don't need that. I believe that many problems in this world could be solved with a little kindness. And if you disagree and think that we don't need more kindness then I am a loss for words.

where do we say we want less kindness?

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

Replying to: Xavier Chavez: We cant make it like that though. We have set a picture for what schools are like here in America and it really sucks what society has done.

Facts

Theodore Jackson - an hour ago

Replying to: Theodore Jackson: Schools just need to be more like a home and a safe place to be for kids.

We cant make it like that though. We have set a picture for what schools are like here in America and it really sucks what society has done.

Xavier Chavez - an hour ago

Replying to: Theodore Jackson: Schools just need to be more like a home and a safe place to be for kids.

heck yeah

Lyric Kent - an hour ago

Replying to: Theodore Jackson: Schools just need to be more like a home and a safe place to be for kids.

You can't expect parents to teach kids to be kind because not all parents are teachers have to be some of the kindest most caring people and I feel that at least a small part of their job should be to teach kids to care about what happens to other people otherwise theirs just going to be more hate in this world and we definitely don't need that. I believe that many problems in this world could be solved with a little kindness. And if you disagree and think that we don't need more kindness then I am a loss for words.

Lyric Kent - an hour ago

Replying to: Lyric Kent: Having tough skin is nice but it doesn't work for everyone everyone has a different emotional state and you can't always expect someone to not take something hard if it meant a lot to them. You can brush of certain things but if you keep doing that it's only going to hurt your mental health in the long run because you can't always brush things off and sometimes peoples words can stick with someone for a long time

So this should push them to do even better if they get that sad by not getting something, competition will push them, if they want to stop getting laughed at for lets say getting a D in a class that should push them to do better not just lay down and let all the people that are hating them keep doing it. They need to learn to stand up for themselves

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

Replying to: Theodore Jackson: Schools just need to be more like a home and a safe place to be for kids.

for real
tanneigha o'john - an hour ago

Schools just need to be more like a home and a safe place to be for kids.
Theodore Jackson - an hour ago

Replying to: Lyric Kent: Having tough skin is nice but it doesn't work for everyone everyone has a different emotional state and you can't always expect someone to not take something hard if it meant a lot to them. You can brush of certain things but if you keep doing that it's only going to hurt your mental health in the long run because you can't always brush things off and sometimes peoples words can stick with someone for a long time

Exactly.
Xavier Chavez - an hour ago

i doubt some kids care if their equal to everyone else
tanneigha o'john - an hour ago

Replying to: Chase Robertson: teach kids from their parents

Having tough skin is nice but it doesn't work for everyone everyone has a different emotional state and you can't always expect someone to not take something hard if it meant a lot to them. You can brush of certain things but if you keep doing that it's only going to hurt your mental health in the long run because you can't always brush things off and sometimes peoples words can stick with someone for a long time
Lyric Kent - an hour ago

Replying to: Chase Robertson: Then why dont we teach kids to have tough skin and know that you playing varsity wont mater 50 years down the road it doesnt matter

We cant necessarily do that because some kids take things deep and maybe being on varsity has been a big goal for them and possibly their parents could scold them about not making it and their friends may make fun of them.
Xavier Chavez - an hour ago

Replying to: Theodore Jackson: people just need to not let things bother them so much. parents need to teach their kids to brush things off and not get upset.

Exactly

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

Replying to: Chase Robertson: teach kids from their parents people just need to not let things bother them so much. parents need to teach their kids to brush things off and not get upset.

Theodore Jackson - an hour ago

*school

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

schools is for education

Parents are for everything else

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

teach kids from their parents

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

Then why dont we teach kids to have tough skin and know that you playing varsity wont mater 50 years down the road it doesnt matter

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

Replying to: Chase Robertson: dont we have safe to tell

That is true but I feel that some people are scared to use it

Theodore Jackson - an hour ago

that's probably why they do that maybe because its a bigger school and have more stuff going on then most

tanneigha o'john - an hour ago

dont we have safe to tell

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

give examples

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

so how

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

Replying to: Lyric Kent: Personally I believe that the education system should be tweaked and that education should be a primary goal of world leaders. In countries around the world that have "good" education systems students aren't learning real life stuff like bills and taxes but also emotional education and social skills. We are just given homework and tests and told to have it all done by a certain day and even though that could develop accountability it also creates a lot of anxiety and stress that can create problems for people later on in life because. Since almost everything we do in school is graded, getting a bad grade on something that you put a lot of effort into can create a feeling of inadequacy. If that feeling of inadequacy is repeated it can turn into a constant feeling of not being good enough even though you're giving it your all. The school systems of today don't focus and making people feel that they are good enough and that they are smart because not everyone one's brain works the same way. I feel that if our education system but energy into creating an accepting and loving environment that teen depression rates would go down and people would be more involved in their learning because they no longer feel like they aren't good enough, if we had a class where we just talked about what was going on and vocalized how we felt about ourselves after a test that we could create a better learning system that focused on bettering the mental health of students. Sorry it's off topic kinda but is one of my topics on my discussion sheet your saying some subjects in school do not matter but what if you want to be an account-in your going to have to know math, like whatever you do in your life when you grow up your going to have to take something you learned in high school with you.

tanneigha o'john - an hour ago

Replying to: Lyric Kent: Personally I believe that the education system should be tweaked and that education should be a primary goal of world leaders. In countries around the world that have "good" education systems students aren't learning real life stuff like bills and taxes but also emotional education and social skills. We are just given homework and tests and told to have it all done by a certain day and even though that could develop accountability it also creates a lot of anxiety and stress that can create problems for people later on in life because. Since almost everything we do in school is graded, getting a bad grade on something that you put a lot of effort into can create a feeling of inadequacy. If that feeling of inadequacy is repeated it can turn into a constant feeling of not being good enough even though you're giving it your all. The school systems of today don't focus and making people feel that they are good enough and that they are smart because not everyone one's brain works the same way. I feel that if our education system but energy into creating an accepting and loving environment that teen depression rates would go down and people would be more involved in their learning because they no longer feel like they aren't good enough, if we had a class where we just talked about what was going on and vocalized how we felt about ourselves after a test that we could create a better learning system that focused on bettering the mental health of students. Sorry it's off topic kinda but is one of my topics on my discussion sheet

You mentioned teen depression brought on because of school work, what are the rates in the past and how have the facts that social media can contribute to teen depression effect that, and just how the times change, we become a more dependent people over the years and that can effect mental health to be seen as you said inadequacy

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

Replying to: Lyric Kent: Yeah pretty much

Well then I agree 100%

Theodore Jackson - an hour ago

Replying to: Theodore Jackson: So are you saying that schools should not give out homework?

Yeah pretty much

Lyric Kent - an hour ago

Replying to: Lyric Kent: Personally I believe that the education system should be tweaked and that education should be a primary goal of world leaders. In countries around the world that have "good" education systems students aren't learning real life stuff like bills and taxes but also emotional education and social skills. We are just given homework and tests and told to have it all done by a certain day and even though that could develop accountability it also creates a lot of anxiety and stress that can create problems for people later on in life because. Since almost everything we do in school is graded, getting a bad grade on something that you put a lot of effort into can create a feeling of inadequacy. If that feeling of inadequacy is repeated it can turn into a constant feeling of not being good enough even though you're giving it your all. The school systems of today don't focus and making people feel that they are good enough and that they are smart because not everyone one's brain works the same way. I feel that if our education system but energy into creating an accepting and loving environment that teen depression rates would go down and people would be more involved in their learning because they no longer feel like they aren't good enough, if we had a class where we just talked about what was going on and vocalized how we felt about ourselves after a test that we could create a better learning system that focused on bettering the mental health of students. Sorry it's off topic kinda but is one of my topics on my discussion sheet

So are you saying that schools should not give out homework?

Theodore Jackson - an hour ago

theodore jackson - an hour ago

Replying to: Sheridan Brull: Example question...

Personally I believe that the education system should be tweaked and that education should be a primary goal of world leaders.

In countries around the world that have "good" education systems students aren't learning real life stuff like bills and taxes but also emotional education and social skills. We are just given homework and tests and told to have it all done by a certain day and even though that could develop accountability it also creates a lot of anxiety and stress that can create problems for people later on in life because. Since almost everything we do in school is graded, getting a bad grade on something that you put a lot of effort into can create a feeling of inadequacy. If that feeling of inadequacy is repeated it can turn into a constant feeling of not being good enough even though you're giving it your all. The school systems of today don't focus and making people feel that they are good enough and that they are smart because not everyone one's brain works the same way. I feel that if our education system but energy into creating an accepting and loving environment that teen depression rates would go down and people would be more involved in their learning because they no longer feel like they aren't good enough, if we had a class where we just talked about what was going on and vocalized how we felt about ourselves after a test that we could create a better learning system that focused on bettering the mental health of students. Sorry it's off topic kinda but is one of my topics on my discussion sheet

Lyric Kent - an hour ago

Replying to: Xavier Chavez: But still I think an officer could do anything else but kill the person such as taze or pepper spray because what if the person has a disability or something? Shooting the person should not be the first action a police officer should take.

But think about it from the police officer's point of view. They probably feel threatened in the same way the protesters do and they are defending their beliefs.

Theodore Jackson - an hour ago

In the US declaration of independence it says that as a people we have a Right and a Duty that if the government becomes corrupt, to over throw
Chase Robertson - an hour ago

Replying to: Xavier Chavez: But still I think an officer could do anything else but kill the person such as taze or pepper spray because what if the person has a disability or something? Shooting the person should not be the first action a police officer should take.

true

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

Replying to: Chase Robertson: the person has to think about their actions

But still I think an officer could do anything else but kill the person such as taze or pepper spray because what if the person has a disability or something?

Shooting the person should not be the first action a police officer should take.

Xavier Chavez - an hour ago

You should express your feelings about the situation instead of letting someone else because they might say it in a way you do not want it to be

tanneigha o'john - an hour ago

but what if you're pationate about a bad thing

Chase Robertson - an hour ago

What changes more, violent protesting or peaceful protesting?

Theodore Jackson - an hour ago

i agree that most people that protest against stuff do take the situations further than it is supposed to be.

tanneigha o'john - an hour ago

the person has to think about their actions

Chase Robertson - 2 hours ago

Replying to: tanneigha o'john: But are protest always the right answer though?

They can be if they are done in the right way.

Theodore Jackson - 2 hours ago

The person that died probably did something that in the situation the cop is trained to kill to prevent further damage

Chase Robertson - 2 hours ago

But are protest always the right answer though?

tanneigha o'john - 2 hours ago

Replying to: Sheridan Brull: Example question

Replying to: Sheridan Brain. Example question...

Its not the government thats protesting its the people against the people
Chase Robertson - 2 hours ago